This survey of TROQUEER Memorial Inscriptions follows on from three earlier surveys. The first two were in the 1970s and the third was in the late 1990s. One of the 1970s surveys was carried out by Ewart Library staff, the other was funded by the MSC (Manpower Services Commission) as part of a series of job creation schemes throughout Dumfries and Galloway. Young unemployed persons, supervised by local amateur historians and genealogists, recorded memorial inscriptions from a number of Kirkcudbrightshire graveyards. None of these early surveys were published but copies were deposited in local Libraries.

The more recent survey was undertaken by Alison Mitchell and was published by the Scottish Genealogical Society. Only the MSC survey recorded actual MIs, the others used a summary abbreviated style to record the inscriptions.

In our survey of 2013/14 some stones recorded earlier could not be found and others were no longer fully readable. All MIs were checked, some were corrected and others were added to include more recent burials information.

It is never an easy task to single out the contribution of individuals when many volunteers have contributed large and small to such a project as this.

It will suffice to say that this booklet has come about as a result of the willing cooperation of a large number of volunteers from the Dumfries & Galloway Family History Society who gave their time and skills freely.

Their only reward will be the knowledge that the end product, economically priced, will aid other genealogists and family historians world-wide to further their research.

Introduction and Historical Notes

The Parish of Troqueer lies within the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright and includes the former Burgh of Maxwelltown. The Parish is bordered on the North by the Parish of Terregles, on the South by New Abbey Parish, on the West by Lochrutton Parish and has the River Nith to the East. The present church stands in an elevated position above the River Nith and is the latest of many churches which have stood on this site.

The Rev John Ewart, writing in 1799, describes the parish as predominately rural in nature and being seven and a half miles long and four and a half miles wide. The River Nith played a significant part in the life of the parishioners providing them with fish as well as sea marl used as a fertiliser. In the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries the Nith was a busy navigable waterway and a significant number of parishioners are shown to have died in foreign parts.

The village of Bridgend which was within the parish lay directly across the Nith from Dumfries and outside the jurisdiction of the Dumfries magistrates. It was regarded as a lawless place in the 18th and early 19th century.

In 1799 the population of the parish was 2600 with 1302 of those living in Bridgend clustered round Devorgiilla Bridge which linked Troqueer Parish with Dumfries.

The population grew rapidly in the 18th century due in part to the building of a new bridge across the Nith, coupled with the establishment of foundries, a waulk mill, a damask manufactory and two nurseries, growing fruit and vegetables for the Dumfries market. The Dumfries Town Mill lay on the Troqueer side of the river, now The Robert Burns Centre. What is now the Dumfries Museum and Camera Obscura was originally a windmill, later converted to an observatory.

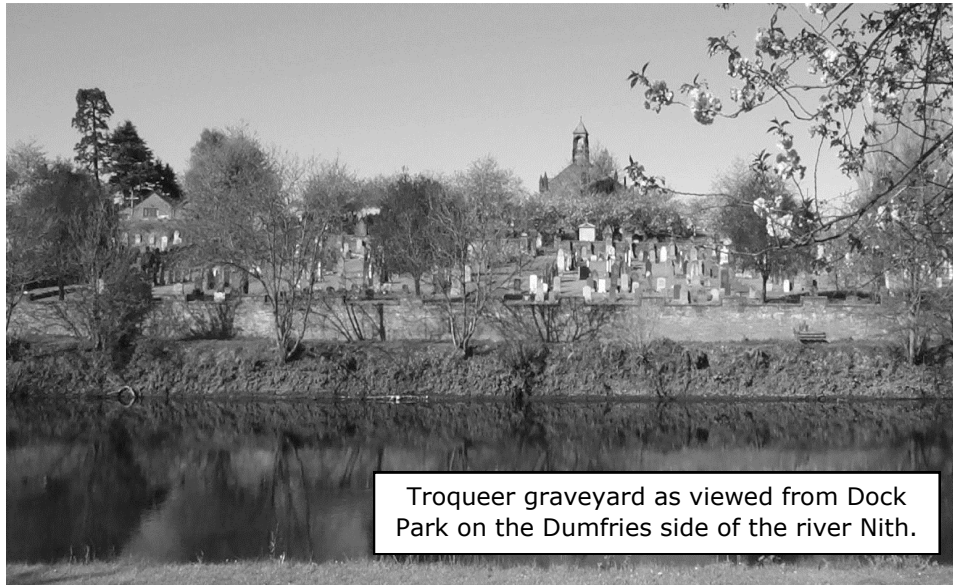

As the population grew, Bridgend became a burgh of barony in 1810 named Maxwelltown after Mr Maxwell of Nithsdale, its superior. By 1821 the population of the parish had risen to 4301, 3048 of whom lived in Maxwelltown. Throughout the 19th century woollen mills were established in Maxwelltown and the main routes to Edinburgh Glasgow London and Portpatrick passed through the burgh.

The wealthy merchants and entrepreneurs of Dumfries began to move out of the overcrowded and sometimes less than salubrious Dumfries tenements and built grand mansions for themselves in what then was the countryside on the Maxwelltown side of the Nith.

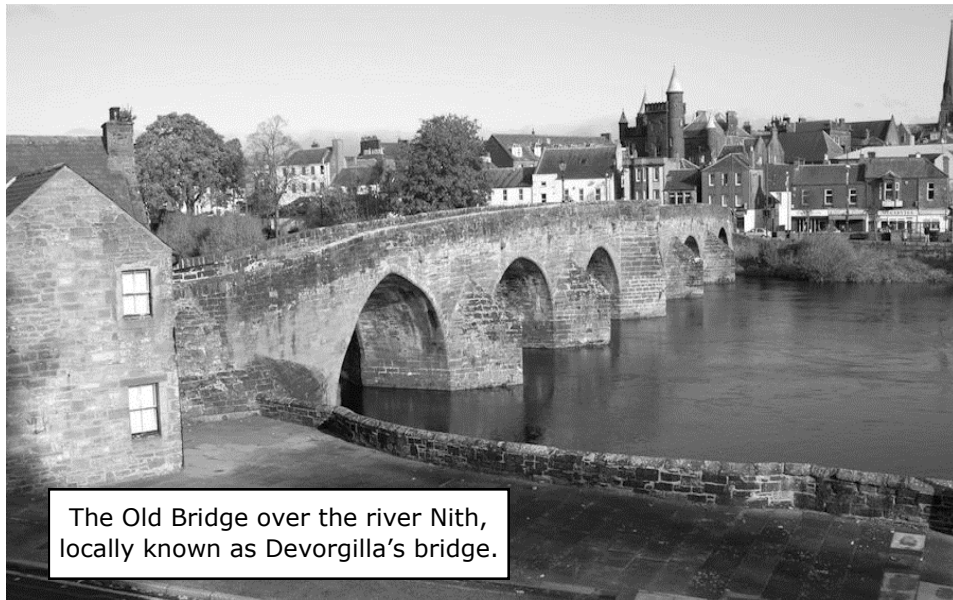

Maxwelltown was joined to Dumfries Burgh under one jurisdiction in 1929. The villas of Summerville, Broomlands, Troqueerholm, Ryedale, Rosefield and Nithside, once the homes of wealthy Dumfries businessmen were developed for housing throughout the 20th century and still are named after the estates which once occupied their sites.

The headstones in Troqueer Churchyard bear testimony to the varied and interesting lives of the inhabitants of the parish long gone.

Rosefield Mill, shown here, is located on the Troqueer side of the River Nith. This mill and a number of others located on both sides of the river Nith, provided employment for many men and women from both Maxwelltown and Dumfries.

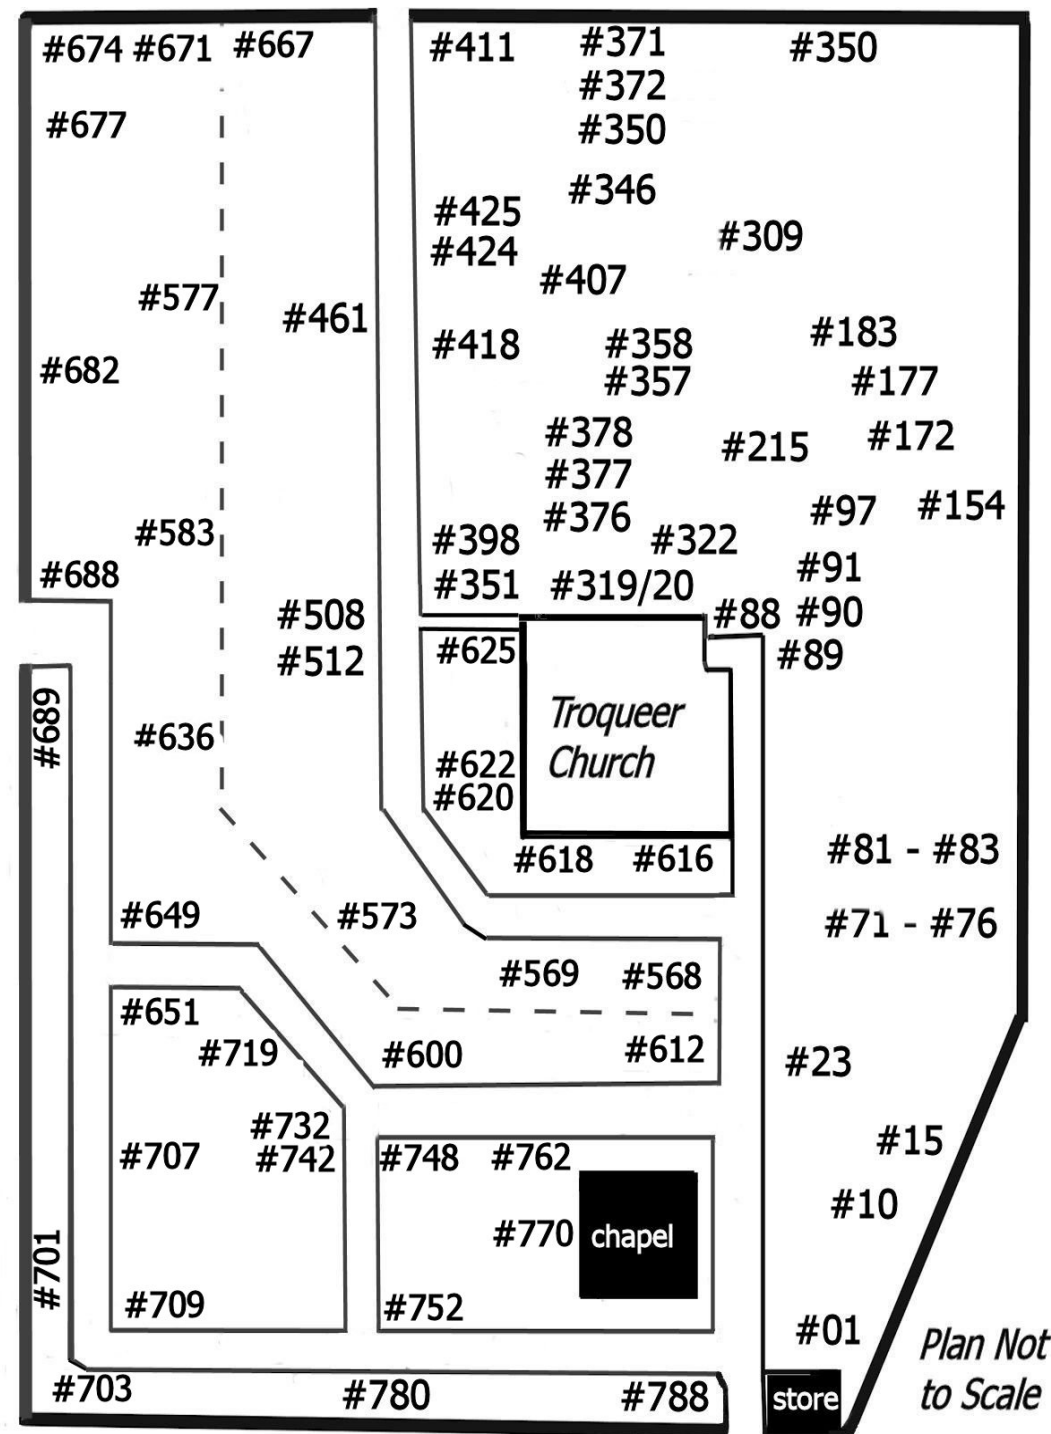

During WW2, while Norway was under German occupation, the Norwegian Military High Command in exile were located in Dumfries. The Building served as barracks for a local contingent of the Norwegian military. Norwegian war graves can be found in Extension 2 of Troqueer graveyard.
